Already established artists in Spanish music, 'Siempre Así' got to record their third album with an international label. The 100.000 copies the sold of 'Cantando que es gerundio' were amply surpassed after this band claimed popularity for their performance in Infanta D<sup>a</sup> Cristina y D. Iñaki Urdangarin's bachelor party. This time around, their formula was the same flamenco pop that made their two previous releases successful. It could be said that Siempre Así's music is a good way to explain Andalusian folklore. A good formula to take the popular music from southern Spain to national and international audiences. With its unmatched formula for rumba, Siempre Así has set a before and after their appearance in music outlook and in addition they have become the 'kings' of their genre.
